A FORMER ATHLETIC manager for Hofstra University's football squad claims she was sexually harassed by jocks who engaged in unsportsmanlike conduct on the team bus.

Lauren Summa was locked in the bus bathroom during one trip and harassed when a video showing graphic interracial sex scenes was played on another ride, according to a complaint filed in Long Island Federal Court.

Summa, a former Miss Teen Pittsburgh and Miss Teen Pennsylvania in 2001, claims an African-American player told her, "That is what you white women want."

When she asked an assistant coach to shut off the movie "Shadowboxer," she said, "The players responded by shouting for [the coach] to play the video and yelling, 'We want boobies!'"

Summa, 23, complained to the head coach, David Cohen, about the bozos on the bus, but says he urged her not to report the incident to campus security.

He told her it "would only draw unneeded attention to the football program," the complaint alleges.

Summa contends she was booted from the football job for filing complaints, and a probe by the state Division of Human Rights backed her up on the alleged retaliation.

"When I gained the courage to stand up and complain, my job was given to someone else," Summa said in a statement released by her lawyer.

Summa is a broadcast journalism graduate student who still attends classes at Hofstra.

"We are confident that all matters relating to Ms. Summa were handled appropriately," said Hofstra spokeswoman Ginny Greenberg.
