OVERVIEW

David E. Gottlieb is a Partner at Wigdor LLP. David is a zealous advocate for employees who have been subjected to discrimination, harassment, retaliation and other forms of unlawful workplace misconduct. He also represents all victims of sexual misconduct and abuse whether that conduct arises in the workplace, educational or medical settings, or otherwise.

A substantial volume of David's work involves various forms of gender discrimination, including sexual harassment, pregnancy discrimination, equal pay violations and matters in which women are excluded from and have careers stalled due to "boys clubs" in the workplace. David has represented thousands of plaintiffs in individual, multi-plaintiff, collective and class action litigation before a wide array of federal and state trial and appellate courts, administrative agencies and arbitral forums. David has represented clients from almost every industry including financial services, hospitality, tech, retail, advertising, manufacturing, medicine and hospitals, transportation, fashion, education, government, communications, architecture, sports and media.

David represented clients in numerous highly publicized employment discrimination matters. He represented five on-air female journalists alleging age and gender discrimination at NY1 in the matter of Torre et al. v. Charter Communications, Inc. et al., No. 19 Civ. 05708, which is widely credited with shining a spotlight on the egregious discrimination women face in the world of TV media. David is one of the lead attorneys in Flores et al. v. National Football League, et al., No. 22 Civ. 00871, the class action filed against the NFL alleging systemic discrimination in the hiring, retention and treatment of head coaches and other executives. David represented a senior in-house lawyer at Goldman Sachs who was terminated for raising complaints about sexual misconduct and a cover-up that went all the way to the bank's then-General Counsel in the matter of Crawford v. Goldman Sachs, Inc., No. 159731/2020. David also represented numerous loss prevention officers in a series of single, multi-plaintiff and class action cases alleging race discrimination at CVS, a matter which receiving national media attention and shed light on the practice of racial profiling in retail settings in Lamarr-Arruz v. CVS Pharmacy, Inc., No. 15 Civ. 04261 (S.D.N.Y.).

"David is a superior attorney with a great wealth of knowledge and experience."
